

Murfreesboro Dam
New Source of Cheap Power

George Douthett, writing in Sunday's Arkansas Democrat, discloses that the Narrows dam now under construction near Murfreesboro will not only afford flood protection but will also develop electric power.

While touring the big construction job with J. C. Shewmake, resident engineer for the Vicksburg office of the U. S. Engineers, Mr. Douthett was informed that the opening electrical installation will have an output of 17,000 KWH to be built up eventually to 25,500 KWH. In the beginning there will be two turbine-generators of 8,500 KWH capacity each, with a third to be added.

The government has made no decision as yet on how the power will be disposed of, the Democrat writer continues. I believe this is the first general publication of the facts of Murfreesboro's hydro-electric power—at least it's new to me. And the story is of tremendous importance to Hope and southwest Arkansas. Hydro-power is cheap power—and cheap power is a vital commodity regardless what form it takes, whether derived from coal, oil, or water.

The lay public is slow to appreciate complex economic tides. But it can understand something as obvious as the discovery of a new oil field. Well, electric power from the Murfreesboro dam is just as effective, from an industrial standpoint, as finding a new oil field—perhaps more so. Transmission lines will make Murfreesboro hydro-power available over a wide area, particularly in Hope, about 50 miles away. If we ever expect to get on an interconnected power line for industrial purposes this may be the ticket we're looking for.

The City of Hope and Hope Chamber of Commerce should from now on keep a standing committee to follow events as the Narrows dam approaches completion. We have only to look at the Piedmont section of the Carolinas, and the region of the Tennessee Valley Authority, to realize what the impact of hydro-power means in the development of industry that are large users of electricity.

The story isn't entirely favorable, however. I might as well tell you that year-round power isn't usually obtainable from the river valleys of Arkansas—their storage capacities are too limited to furnish maximum power output through the dry season. On this point I am quoting from memory the authentic reports of government surveys, Arkansas Power & Light Co. engineers, and others.

The great trial horse for hydro-power in Arkansas is, of course, the series of dams that the A. F. & L. has built on the Ouachita river near Hot Springs. The Remmel dam was constructed first, between Malvern and Hot Springs, but the fluctuation of the water level in Lake Catherine (formed by Remmel dam) was so great that the power necessary to build Carpenter dam, forming Lake Hamilton.

The situation at Hot Springs now is that the water level of the lower lake, Catherine, is stabilized for one of two efficient production—but the upper lake, Hamilton, fluctuates so badly that a third dam is being constructed still farther up the river at Blakely Mountain. The eventual picture is of two efficient generating plants drawing water from the lower lakes while the top-most lake acts as a reservoir to keep their water levels more or less constant.

The dam on the Little Missouri river, therefore, the Narrows reservoir and generating plant represents a mere beginning—with the probability that the power output will be seasonal, at best—a beginning, an important beginning. For it offers an opportunity to feed electricity at rock-bottom prices into the lines of existing plants, setting up an industrial power network for the future of the section where all of us live.

Marshall Plan Has Its Effect On Outcome of French Crisis

BY JAMES THRASHER
A reporter's last question got a fast and interesting answer from Paul G. Hoffman at a press conference the other day. Any Marshall Plan country that sets up a Fascist government, the ECA director said, would be refused American aid as surely as if the Communists had taken control. He added, in response to another pointed question that he "most certainly did not consider General de Gaulle a Fascist."

Yet the reporter could scarcely have been thinking of any person but General de Gaulle or any country but France when he put the query. And in spite of Mr. Hoffman's emphatic exclusion of de Gaulle from the Fascist category, his statement is not likely to escape the French government's notice.

It may strengthen the moderate parties' determination to make the

Soviet Ingratitude Theme as Teacher Begins Her Story

MRS. KASENKINA'S SLEEP IS UNTRUBLED NOW—Although she still suffers from the injuries sustained in her leap from the window of the Russian consulate in New York, no Russian nightmares plague the dreams of Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina now. These exclusive, candid photographs of Mrs. Kasenkina, safe in her bed at Roosevelt Hospital, New York, were taken during a nap, her face a picture of repose, and at the moment of awakening. Her story, a great human interest document begins today in Hope Star. (Copyright 1948, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Countess Tolstoy Recalls How Mrs. Kasenkina Came to Refuge at the Reed Farm

COUNTESS TOLSTOY

"Before her dramatic escape from the Russian Consulate, she was leaving to avoid her turn to the Soviet. Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina found haven for a few days in the Tolstoy Foundation's Reed Farm outside Nyack, N. Y., a refuge for these Russians' and up with life under Stalin's totalitarian government.

Founder and president of the foundation is the Countess Alexandra Tolstoy, daughter of the immortal novelist, Leo Tolstoy. She was Mrs. Kasenkina's friend during her brief retreat at Reed Farm and she was the first one permitted to the injured school teacher's bedside after the desperate leap that promptly became the outstanding news story of the year.

Here is Countess Tolstoy's urgent plea that Americans—and people the world over—read the coming revelations, installment by installment, as Mrs. Kasenkina tells of one "person's" experiences under the harsh rule of the Red dictatorship.

The first installment appears on page one.

By ALEXANDRA TOLSTOY
Who is the "teacher Kasenkina"? She is one of one hundred and eighty million Russian people who are asking the world to demonstrate to the world the difference between the Russian people and their ruthless, dictatorial government.

We the masses—are the oppressed. They—the minority—are the oppressors. When Mrs. Kasenkina leaped from the third floor of the Soviet Consulate, she proved to the whole world that death was better than going back to the "paradise."

Soon after her escape, I saw Mrs. Kasenkina in the hospital. She was lying quietly in bed, bruised, broken in limb, bleeding—but happy. She smiled when I came in. She told me, "I am glad to suffer."

She was glad to suffer for the Russian cause, for the better, for the future of the world, when the Soviet rulers by the American public.

Reports Seeing Killer, Manhunt Continues

Yellville, Sept. 27. —(UP)—A posse shifted its search for the sharpshooting killer of Lee's Mountain to a point southwest of here early today after a railroad brakeman reported seeing a man answering the fugitive's description.

The brakeman told state police he saw a man crossing the Missouri Pacific railroad track near the small community of Pyatt a few miles west of here.

The railroad employee said the man answered the description of the 23-year-old, khaki-clad man who is being sought for the slayings of State Trooper Sidney A. Pavani and an elderly resident of the rugged Lee's Mountain community, G. D. Crook.

The area around Pyatt is as mountainous and wooded as that of the Lee's Mountain vicinity where the manhunt has been in progress for nearly 48 hours.

Bloodhounds and airplanes were being rushed to Pyatt by state police, sheriff's deputies and civilian searchers. The trail of the man seen by the brakeman—the first break in the two-day hunt for the armed, dangerous killer.

Prosecuting attorney R. E. Rush of Harrison said officers are convinced that the man they want is Kenneth D. Speegle, 23-year-old old Marion county resident who has been A-W-O-L from Ft. Lewis, Wash., since Aug. 31. Rush said first degree murder charges would be filed against Speegle today.

The widespread search for a mysterious slayer got underway Saturday afternoon after State Continued on page two

Shriners Put on Colorful Show Here

The show of shows, a parade by the Shrine Clubs of Arkansas at 1:30 p. m. Saturday attracted the largest crowd during the Third District Livestock Show, which proved the most successful in history.

Thousands lined the downtown streets to see the colorful uniformed drill and bugle corps, two bands, the mounted patrol of the organization. Antics of the visitors delighted the huge audience.

Sixty candidates from this section were initiated into the organization.

A feature of the night was a football game between Gordon and Nashville. In ceremonies before the game, the Shrine Club of Nashville were presented to the Shrine by Mayor Lyle Brown of Hope. Others making short talks were Ole Olson, Mayor Sam Wassell of Little Rock and John M. McQuinn, Hattiesburg, Miss.

In the football game the Scrappers from Nashville simply overpowered a much smaller eleven from Gordon 35 to 0. The Go-Devils had the scrap and line and again stopped the Scrappers' drive. Nashville held a halfback edge of 12 points and pushed over another in the third period. At the end of the game the fighting Gordon boys were down on Nashville's 1-foot line.

A large crowd saw the game and were entertained by the Shrine's foot patrol during the halftime period.

Powers Told to Agree Or Get Out

Berlin, Sept. 27. —(AP)—Berlin's city government told the four occupying powers today they should get out of Berlin if they cannot settle their differences.

The proposal was in a resolution drafted by the executive branch of the government and read to a meeting of the city council by acting Mayor Friedrich Friessner.

The resolution asked, however, that "so long as the occupation of Germany continues" Berlin should remain under four-power control and that "no one power have any more influence in Berlin than any other."

This was a slap at the Russians, who have been seeking to overthrow the four-power control and achieve full Communist control of the city.

The Socialist press claimed today the Russians are throwing thousands of new victims into concentration camps in eastern Germany's intensified purge of anti-Communists.

The official "Sozial Demokrat" described what it called "transports of misery" headed for Buchenwald, the former Nazi concentration camp in Thuringia.

The newspaper described one such railroad transport of 40 heavily-guarded freight cars which it claimed was crowded to suffocation with German prisoners sent to confinement. The train escorted by heavily armed Soviet soldiers outfitted with search lights.

"When the cars were opened, a fearful stench gushed forth and the inmates were seen in wretched condition," the Socialist organ reported.

When this transport returned empty, the dispatch added, two similarly loaded trains came along a few minutes later, also bound for Buchenwald.

There have been frequent reports in the German press that Buchenwald was crowded with political prisoners of the Communists. These reports have never been denied publicly by the Russians, who also have refused to permit any western representatives to inspect this or other Soviet zone camps.

Ministerial Group Favors Curtailment of Non-Religious Activity on Sundays

In its regular monthly meeting the Hope Ministerial Alliance voted to recommend that non-religious activities in Hope on Sundays be curtailed and that an Arkansas law requiring business establishments to close on Sundays be enforced.

The Alliance issued the following statement: "The Hope Ministerial Alliance in their regular monthly meeting discussed the matter of Sabbath Observance. After some discussion it was unanimously voiced that we could do no better than recommend to the people of this community that God's Word concerning Sabbath Observance be re-emphasized — 'remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy.' Fears Berlin Issue May Wreck UN

By JOSEPH E. DYNAN
Paris, Sept. 27. —(AP)—The western powers sent the United Nations to the Security Council today and British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin immediately expressed fear it might wreck the United Nations.

In Berlin, a Russian-controlled newspaper echoed his words, saying that if the Western powers force a U. N. debate on Berlin "a wedge will be driven into the U. N. which may split the entire world organization."

If such a thing should come to pass and if the "black fury" of atomic war should follow, Bevin told the United Nations assembly the fault would be Russia's and Russia's alone.

But, he added: "It is better to have our difficulties now than to live in a fool's paradise."

A Big Four delegate said the Western powers—Britain, France and the United States—expect to open their attack on Russia's three-month-old blockade of Berlin Thursday in the security council.

Alexandre Parodi, France's security council delegate, said present plans call for handling the security council problem under the terms of the U. N. Charter which deals with threats to peace and international security. That means the west is risking a Soviet veto — or a walkout.

The three powers accused Russia last night of threatening world peace by her actions in Berlin, emphasized their determination to stay in the city — an island of four-power territory deep in the Russian zone — and reserved the right to take such steps as may be necessary to break the blockade.

Bevin's speech — so emotional that his voice broke as he called on Russia to "open up the world and let light and knowledge come in" — got a roaring, cheering reception from the delegates. All the big powers had their chief delegates on the floor for the event. Listening in were U. S. Secretary of State Marshall, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky and French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman.

Vishinsky's face was grim as he strode from the hall after the speech.

Bevin hinted that Britain envisages the end of the United Nations unless a solution is found to the East-West crisis, and added: "If we cannot proceed on a world basis as we had hoped, we must proceed on a regional basis."

The reason I am afraid (for the U. N.) is fundamentally a simple one," Bevin declared. "It is that although they often put forward a point of view which cannot be disregarded and which should be intelligently discussed, a minority in the matters of security refuses to accommodate itself even in the slightest degree to the wishes and desires of the majority."

Bevin said an "onslaught is being made directly or indirectly on the rights of peoples and individuals. It is we who are on the defensive. It is we who are availing of a cold war waged against us all from Moscow."

The threat of the war of nerves hangs over us in the activities of the Cominform (Communist International Information Bureau) and other bodies."

Speaking with all the solemnity of a prophet, Bevin said: "If the black fury, the incalculable disaster of atomic war should fall upon us, all I can say is that Continued on page two

The Doctor Says:

By EDWIN P. JORDAN, M.D.
Written for NEA Service

Every patient who is ill wants to know whether recovery will occur, how long it will take to get well, and if recovery is not complete how much the future activities will be interfered with.

Now these are thoroughly reasonable questions and often they cannot be answered to the patient's satisfaction. The reason for this is that no two people react exactly alike to the same disease. Furthermore a single disease varies a great deal in its effects on different patients. Thus even in most mild diseases there will be a few patients, perhaps one or two out of a hundred who may develop serious complications. About all the doctor can do in such cases, therefore, is to state that the vast majority recover without difficulty.

When the proportion of those who do not recover from a disease is high the problem of forecasting the outcome is particularly difficult. At the beginning of an illness also it is more difficult to tell what the result will be than it is later on when the physician has had a chance to observe the disease and its effect on the patient. Consequently experienced doctors are naturally reluctant to tell a patient or his family something definite when there may be a 50 per cent chance of being wrong.

The same problems exist when it comes to the question of how long an illness may last. A few diseases like measles almost always take about the same length of time. The vast majority of conditions, however, vary so much that it is extremely difficult to say how long completely recovery will take. The outcome of illness is thus dependent on many factors such as the age of the patient, the family history, state of health at the time when the illness developed and the mental attitude of the patient. For all these reasons most physicians are reluctant to answer what seem like perfectly good questions, and when they try to do so the forecast all too often errs.

Note: Dr. Jordan is unable to answer individual questions from readers. However, each day he will answer one of the most frequently asked questions in his column.

QUESTION: Is there a cure for gastritis?
ANSWER: There are several forms of gastritis. One of the most common is due to food poisoning and this generally cures itself in a short time without treatment. Some forms of gastritis, however, are exceedingly resistant to treatment and can become chronic in nature.

The column of cavalry rounded the corner of the narrow, ancient street, the horses' hoofs clapping noisily over the Spanish cobblestones. The day was hot and lazy. The sun beat down on the plumed helmets and the yellow tunics of the dragons in the column as they rode toward the great Sevillian square.

They rode easily, with a bored indifference. All excepting one, a young, fresh-faced and handsome fellow. His sleeve held a corporal's chevrons and he did his best to appear as professionally disinterested in the new and exciting sights of Seville as were his comrades. It was impossible for him to hold his eyes in check. They darted from side to side along the narrow streets.

The column rode across the square toward the great gate of the military barracks. Even with the color and the clank and the hoof-clapping of the company, few citizens were out to watch. It was siesta time and the square was almost empty.

As the column crossed the square, the corporal had all he could do to keep from twisting in his saddle to view all sides of his new place of duty.

Once through the gate the column lined up abreast and dismounted at an order from the hard-faced sergeant. The sergeant walked directly to the corporal.

"Your name?"
"Don Jose," the corporal saluted smartly.
"Don Jose Lizarrabengoa of Navarre, reporting for duty."
"The colonel will see you now. Follow me."

The colonel was a sallow, handsome man in his early forties, with long, dark hair, a large nose, and a heavy-lidded eye. He was standing before a desk bare of papers and he observed the corporal with cool detachment as the young soldier stumbled nervously to attention before him.

"It is my duty and my pleasure, Don Jose," the colonel said, taking a paper from the top drawer and glancing at it as though to verify what he had to say, "to welcome you to our regiment."

"Thank you, sir."

The colonel gave the younger man a long, appraising look. When he spoke again his tones were deliberate. "No doubt you have heard that life is pleasant in this regiment, that it is a fashionable catch-all for young men of good family with no talents to speak of. You may have heard that we are called the gay policemen, because we do little more than stand guard here and there a few hours a day and keep the peace, such as it is, in Seville."

The colonel paused as an orderly came into the room with a bottle of wine and a glass on a tray. As the orderly put the tray down and started to uncork the bottle, he continued: "The rest of the time—you may have heard—"

"Oh no, sir," the corporal murmured.

The colonel ignored the interruption. "Is spent in the consumption of many bottles of wine, in gambling, and in making love to the girls from the cigar factory. There are approximately 200 of these girls. The factory is next door to our barracks." He nodded his head toward the window. "A great blessing and a convenience for the dragons."

The orderly started to fill the glass of wine.

"Yes, sir," said Don Jose agreeing blindly.

The orderly paid more attention to the conversation than to what he was doing and poured the glass too full, spilling wine upon the polished desk. By not so much as the flicker of an eye did the colonel appear to notice this, and the orderly, in quick panic, leaped over to mop it up with the end of his sash. The colonel continued talking to Don Jose.

"I say you may have heard these things and they are quite true. He turned slightly and with a vicious movement slapped a fly across his forehead. The suddenness of his hand. The suddenness of his eyes blink. The colonel said, "Get out." The orderly almost ran out of the room, eyes wide.

Don Jose stood still, believing the fact that anything untoward had happened. The colonel sat down contentedly in his desk chair.

"Let me inform you, Don Jose, that a young man willing to work and to maintain a degree of integrity, sobriety, and honor has a bright future in this regiment. There are altogether too few of you. Your record is good. You Navarros are hard-working, moral, and proud. We need more like you here. I hope you are ambitious."

you here. I hope you are ambitious?"

Don Jose answered automatically. "Yes, sir." Then as though he were confiding precious information, he said, "I am told that in Seville a promotion in the Dragons is a step toward a Government position."

The colonel nodded, his mouth twisting into a wry half-smile. He turned in his chair and looked at the corporal obliquely as though he were looking back across many years at himself and his own ambitions and seeing also the hopelessness that they had brought. He put his fingers together in front of his chest, making a steeple, stared into them for a moment and then said, "A good thing to keep in mind, I am sure. I will do what I can to help you." He glanced up at Don Jose. "Have you ever been in Seville before? Do you know the city?"

"No, sir."

The colonel leaned over and scribbled a few words on a piece of paper from the same carry-all drawer in his desk. "You are relieved of duties for 48 hours. Look about the city. Familiarize yourself with it. The people here and in Andalusia generally are a different breed from your northern folk. Don Jose, I will see you again."

Don Jose the slip of paper. "Dismissed."

When Don Jose walked along down the narrow street, he saw the other side of the square, the city was beginning to wake from its siesta, but there were still few people in sight.

It was an extremely picturesque street. On one side there were buildings, some three, some four stories high. On the other side was a stone embankment, below which ran the trickle of a stream. It was a city stream, just as the people were city people; flowing weakly downhill, muddied and purposeless. In a way it did remind the country boy of the clear, strong rapids of Navarre that threw themselves from mountain tops into rich valleys. Nor were the people like the direct clear-eyed robust people of his home.

The stream was a ramshackle of buildings and balconies, and balconies, and the general effect was poor but spacious. There was none of the narrow confinement that characterized most of the streets in Seville.

Don Jose strolled slowly. He pulled at his watch, large gold object at the end of a heavy chain, and looked at it casually. He swung it for a moment, idly, looking around him. Then he returned it absently to his pocket. One or two men, a dog, a woman carrying a duck, and two ragged urchins trotting along the stone embankment, were all that seemed to be moving in Seville so far that afternoon.

As he reached the foot of the street, Don Jose stopped and stared on a post to get his bearings, he rather to decide whether he should walk to the right, to the left, or to continue straight ahead. Suddenly an orange peel landed with flung force on the pavement at his feet. He looked up.

About two feet above his head he saw a pretty face peering out from a balcony. The face was red, cheeks fastened with flame-colored ribbons, covering white silk stockings with more than one hole in them. Above the face he saw a full, short red skirt, then a blouse, then the head of a well-tousted hoyden, as beautiful as sin. She had thrown her shawl back to show her shoulders, and a rose was thrust into the low-cut bosom of her blouse.

In his own country, had Don Jose seen a woman dressed like that, he would have crossed himself.

U. S. Needs 100 More Planes to Aid Air Lift

Washington, Sept. 27 —(UP)—The U. S. Air Force in Europe is 100 planes short of what is needed to meet the goal of the Berlin air lift. Lt. Gen. Curtis LeMay said today.

LeMay, who has directed the air lift throughout the 100 days of the Russian blockade of the German capital, outlined the needs of a far-reaching program. He said that the United States soon will take over as commander of the strategic air forces.

The side-stopped all questions, and LeMay said that he was over to meet the need for possible use of force by the Russians in an effort to seal the Western air corridors to Berlin.

Old Dresses Look Smart Nowadays

By BARBARA BUNDSCHU
United Press Fashion Writer

New York, Sept. 26 —(UP)—Some of the nation's most notable society women are looking smart today in dresses they've had as long as 14 years.

Dressmaker Elizabeth Hawes borrowed a baker's dozen of those old clothes back from her customers to show of with her new collection this week. No one could tell which ones were which.

Most of the old news were evening dresses. But their greater evidence of survival seemed to prove merely that they didn't wear out as fast. The surviving daytime costumes were just as fashionable as the evening gowns two Mrs. Rockefellers, Gladys Swarthout and Mrs. Curtis Bok have been dressing up in for at least 10 years.

Miss Hawes' costumes of both eras have a medieval look attributable to her prejudice against bras and girdles.

Adding to the medieval flavor are bright insets of color in dark dresses, sloping shoulders and the soft drapery and easy skirts which are the only camouflage permitted a bumpy anatomy.

Back in 1937 Miss Hawes turned out a brocade evening gown for Gladys Swarthout. The v-necked bodice has a softly draped bustline and a sleek midriff. The skirt is belled from a stiff seam low on the hips. The train ties up a notch at the back of the knees when Miss Swarthout wants it out of the way.

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller III's 1935 dress was made from her own striped blue Japanese silk. Its cap sleeves show off the darker blue and red banding which is repeated in the two dipping-in-back skirt tiers.

The pale blue evening dress Mrs. Laurence Rockefeller bought back in 1928 has a banded V neckline, a gathered bust and front full skirt below a snugly wrapped midriff. The one-piece front and adjustable wide waistband give it a universality usefulness, but it wasn't designed for that purpose, and it doesn't look it.

Miss Hawes made an evening cape in 1936 for Mrs. Curtis Bok of Philadelphia. Its back has a wide-armed shoulder inset and center stripe of gold lame. Miss Hawes liked that so much she made it up again for 1948 — they both look fine.

13 Die in Berlin Movie Accident

Berlin, Sept. 27 —(UP)—Police reported today that 13 persons were killed and 40 were injured last night when part of the ceiling of the Palmist movie theater in the U. S. sector collapsed.

Workers still were digging through the wreckage on a chance that additional victims were buried. The casualty toll was earlier by police at 18 dead and scores injured.

American military police aided German doctors and first aid workers in providing emergency care for the injured.

Some 250 persons were in the audience. Police said the large balcony protected most of the audience in the orchestra section.

DOROTHY DIX Discouraged Nurse

Dear Miss Dix: I am a student nurse 19 years old and have been in training for about a year, but I find that I have lost all interest in my profession and I want to leave the school and go back to college and finish the stenographic course which I started at one time. Anyway, I don't like nursing.

Another reason why I want to make the change is that my fiancé has just returned after two years in the army, and he has gone back to college. If I made this change, I could be near him. I don't want to interfere with his education, and we both realize we are too young to marry and that it is best to wait until I finish my education and he has a good start on his.

My parents object to this and think that I should go on with my training as a nurse. Do you think that I am crazy to give up the work that I am not interested in and do something that I like to do?

STUDENT
Answer: No, I don't. I think the most important thing in every boy's and girl's life is to try to find out while they are still in school, if possible, what Nature intended them to do. All of us have some aptitude, some one thing that we enjoy doing and are interested in doing, and our success or failure depends upon whether we get our appointed place in the scheme of things, or not.

High Calling
In your case because nursing isn't just a job. It is a vocation. For sick people are not attractive in themselves. They are cross and unreasonable and demanding, and ers in providing emergency care for the injured.

Some 250 persons were in the audience. Police said the large balcony protected most of the audience in the orchestra section.

RHEUMATISM YIELDS TO SPECIALIZED SYSTEM OF TREATMENT

Excelsior Springs, Mo., Sept. 27. So successful has a specialized system proven for treating rheumatism and arthritis that an amazing new book will be sent free to any reader of this paper who will write for it.

The book entitled, "Rheumatism," fully explains why drugs and medicines give only temporary relief and fail to remove the causes of the trouble.

The Ball Clinic, Excelsior Springs, Mo., has perfected a specialized system of treatment for rheumatism and arthritis combined with the world famous mineral waters and baths. This new system of treatment is fully described in the book and shows how it may be possible for you to find freedom from rheumatism.

You incur no obligation in sending for this instructive book. It may be the means of saving you years of untold misery. For writing promptly, the Clinic will send their newly combined book entitled "Rheumatism—Good Health, Life's Greatest Blessing." Address your letter to The Ball Clinic, Dept. 4210, Excelsior Springs, Missouri, but be sure to write today.

only one who is capable of having pity for them and an endless patience and forbearance should undertake it as a career. Nursing is a great and noble work, but it is not for everyone.

However, you needn't regret the year you have spent in training because whatever knowledge you have acquired about how to minister to sick people will be of use to you all of your life.

I hope you and your fiancé will have the good sense to stick to your resolution and not to get married until you are older and are in a position to support a wife.

Dear Miss Dix: I have been married almost a year and have been miserable every day of that time because of a jealous husband who will not let me go any place for fear some man will look at me. I can't even go to the movies because a man might sit in the seat next to me. I never have given my husband cause to be jealous and he is making both of our lives miserable. hat can I do?

UNHAPPY
Answer: There is no cure for jealousy because it is beyond all reason. There are only two courses open to you. One is to leave your husband before there are any children to complicate the situation. The other is to steel yourself to live a life of utter misery. God help any man or woman who has a jealous husband or wife.

Asserts Rice Supports Not Upping Costs

Little Rock, Sept. 27 —(AP)—A government agricultural official said today price supports are not responsible for the high cost of living.

C. C. Willey, chairman of the state committee of the Production and Marketing Administration, said if Arkansas housewives were paying for food at the government price support level, the cost of living would be far lower than it is. Willey commented that the price support program on farm products is responsible for the high cost of living.

He said there are no price supports on many items and that price supports on others, such as cotton, corn and wheat have dropped about 30 per cent. He added that there has been no decrease in prices of bread and cotton goods, however.

Johnny Furquerson, football and basketball player for Ouachita college, was named to receive the Neil Hamilton trophy, given to the state's outstanding athlete. Scott won the state award last year.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler
Copyright, 1947
By King Features Syndicate.

New York, Sept. 25 —The authenticity of the goody guru letters seems to be fairly well established and with it an appalling guilt of J. Edgar Hoover in placing Henry Wallace in the office of vice-president of the United States. The guilt of his wife, Eleanor the Great, may have been less grievous at the time that she stepped forth as bubblehead's protector and actually threw heretofore between him and the roaring mob.

After his nomination at the 1940 Democratic convention in Chicago. She may not have known then the story of Wallace's implication in the oriental scam of which Nicholas Roerich was the guru.

If not, however, the vaunted Secret Services of the Treasury and the Department of Justice are greatly overrated. They should have known all about this fantastic and dangerous adventure of a driving simoleon and how it surely no excuse for their failure to notify Roosevelt, or if he knew, for Roosevelt to still put Wallace in nomination. The other Democratic bosses and directors, Felix Frankfurter, Ed Flynn, Harry Hopkins, Jim Farley and Charles McNichols, the party press agent, all should have known. Their mere denials that they did know strain the belief of the most trusting person.

Michelson apparently knew when he wrote in his memoirs that the letters were "of doubtful authenticity." He was a wise, all knowing old gossip and an absolutely cynical and political hater. This is the only matter in which I have ever doubted the word of Jim Farley. I don't believe he wasn't aware Wallace's secret monkey-shines with the cult. After all he had been chairman of the Democratic national committee and this position has private lines of information and rumor in addition to the firm reports from the secret political agencies of the government. These men all denied the people of the United States to elect vice president a man who might have proclaimed a holocaust or revolution to change the form of government according to the gibbering intimations of a madman in the goody guru letters. Roosevelt was the worst but he had partisan necessities in keeping the truth from the people who had a patriotic duty to warn them.

What sort of president would a man have made who was crazy enough to sit down and write such a letter as this:

"Do you remember the little vision of a man for whom you had pity? He was in the other day with a vision which he does not know how to interpret. He dreamed he was talking with WO (meaning Roosevelt) when Wallace referred to as the Waving One in his letter. He looked closely and was amazed to see that instead of eyes there was swirling black smoke. And out of the mouth came the words of the Lord Bible forth for all to see."

Another on the subject of dreams says:

"On the way south I dreamed of the three friends together at a meeting which only the gentle and numerically became aware of a tiger, an ancient enemy. His fear communicated itself. It was not fear for himself but for another and began to divert attention from the other. The tiger passed. It was in a way, a repetition of another dream I heard about not long since."

On the question of authenticity, I can assure you that the person who received these letters and has preserved them to this date has other letters which, as it were, surround these with probability. They disclose a personality all confused and babbling strangely about dreams, clairvoyance, Buddhism, magic, and pure fire, and even going to the heights of the East. The letters spoke of black forces and the Great Ones and of seeking of Agni Yogi, described by books on oriental religion as

Southwest to Eye Arkansas, TCU Game

Dallas, Tex., Sept. 27 —(AP)—Arkansas and Texas Christian begin play for keeps this week in the Southwest Christian conference, but for most team stars another serving of a steady intersectional diet.

The lone conference game at Fort Worth Saturday night is one of two outstanding tilts on the schedule. The other matches Louisiana State against Rice in Houston.

Three other intersectional games are carded and Southern Methodist plays host to Texas Tech in an intrastate brawl.

The mild upset and one big flop marred the conference's showing last week.

Texas Tech overturned Texas A. and M., 20-14, and North Carolina kicked the T out of Texas, 34-7.

The Tarheels gunned up the smooth-working Texas T worse than anyone would have imagined. It was sweet revenge for North Carolina, which had its own bowl dreams shattered by Texas early last season, 34-0.

Texas Christian was brilliant for three minutes against Oklahoma A. and M., scoring three touchdowns that stood up for a 21-14 victory.

All-America Doak Walker turned in a terrific performance against Rice and teamed with Gilbert Johnson to rival it as Southern Methodist opened with a 33-14 decision.

Walker scored two touchdowns and passed for another while Johnson connected on all nine of his passes.

Arkansas easily blasted East Texas State, 46-7, but kept its tricks under cover, using mostly ground play.

SPORTS ROUNDUP

By Hugh E. Fullerton, Jr.

New York, Sept. 27 —(AP)—Twenty five members of the 45-man Texan football squad worked in the oil fields last summer. Maybe that explains where they got those slippery hallmarks, who slipped too much against North Carolina Saturday. Western Conference survey shows that advance ticket sales are running as much as 50 per cent ahead of last year and no school is behind the 1947 figures. Jennings Marburger, Colgate halfback, recently won a prize for having the best paper at an examination in Greek architecture and sculpture.

Stan's Firm Stand
When the Phillies first offered Stan Holmgren, who starred for their Wilmington, Del., farm club this summer, a $100,000 bonus to sign a contract he turned it down. With two years of eligibility left at Texas A. and M. Holmgren figured he should stay there. The Phils, figuring it was just a case of 15 G's and used club then made it $200,000. Stan couldn't resist, so he signed and departed — with the blessing of assorted coaches and professors who wished they could get that kind of dough.

Cleaning the cuff
When Harold Stassen, new University of Pennsylvania president, visited Penn's football training camp at Hershey, Pa., he told Coach George B. Satterlee: "You have a fine looking bunch of boys here, they remind me a little of the teams out in Minnesota." Glenn Dobbs, Los Angeles quarterback, named his new son John Stassen after John Klumbrough and Saxon Judd, that's giving the kid a good start.

Boston declared under the sun today and the Cleveland Indians were brushing their feet on the welcome mat spread for the American League's entry in the 1948 world series.

Billy Southworth's Braves gained admittance to the World Series yesterday when they clinched their first national league pennant since 1914.

The Indians moved a game in front of the runner-up Boston Red Sox and New York Yankees in the tension-laden American League race and away from the threshold of joining the Braves in the series.

Cleveland, behind the brilliant five-hit pitching of Bobby Feller, 4-1, downed the Detroit Tigers, 4-1, while the Yanks dumped the Red Sox 6-2, in the third game of their cut-throat series.

The Indians, like their pursuers, have only five games to play but, unless they suffer sudden collapse, Manager Lou Boudreau's boys can't miss.

If the Indians win three of their remaining five games, the Red Sox or the Yanks must take all five to beat out the Indians.

At the rate the Indians are moving, winning three out of five is a cinch as the tribe has won nine out of its last ten starts. Another feather in the Indians' bonnet is the fact they play out their scheduled season series tomorrow night. They take on the last place Chicago White Sox in the opener of a two-game series and then close out with a threegame series against the Tigers.

Boston is at home for the rest of the season and the best tonic for the slumping Sox is Fenway Park's chummy left field wall. The Sox resume the chase against the weak Washington Senators tomorrow in the opener of a threegame series and close out the season with the Yanks.

The Yanks invade Philadelphia for the first of three games tomorrow and Connie Mack's A's are ready. The A's have been idle for the past four days, that means Dick Fowler, Lou Brissie, Joe Coleman and Carl Scheib will be on the firing line.

Feller was supreme yesterday. The big right-hander, in bagging the sixth straight win and 18th of the year, fanned nine and didn't walk a batter. Feller's only bad inning was the fourth when, with one out, Vic Weritz, Pat Mullin and Dick Wakefield singled in succession to produce the Tiger's lone run.

Joe Gordon gave Feller a working margin when he hammered Hal Newhouse for his 31st homer with a mate on in the third inning. Feller wanted home Cleveland's third run in the fourth and the Tribe completed its scoring in the seventh.

The Braves assured themselves of the buntings by nosing out the New York Giants 3-2, as Bob Elliott's three-run first inning homered off Larry Jansen.

Boston is six games ahead of the runner-up Brooklyn Dodgers. The Braves have six games to play and the Dodgers five.

The Dodgers turned back the Philadelphia Phillies, 5-1, to protect their half game lead over the third place St. Louis Cardinals.

St. Louis, behind the fourth hit of Alvin Dark, stopped the Chicago Cubs 3-2.

The Pittsburgh Pirates banged their way within a half game of the Cards by taking a twin bill from the Cincinnati Reds, 2-0 and 3-0.

In the remaining American League game Randy Gumpert pitched the last place Chicago White Sox to a six hit 3-0 win over the St. Louis Browns. Washington and Philadelphia were idle.
